The Trotting Stallion
DIRIGO.
Their Horse will be kept the present season as follows:
Monday, Tuesday, and Saturdays at W. G. Quinby's stable, Exchange street.
Wednesdays and Thursdays at Judson Bicknell's, Palmyra.
Fridays at G. W. Christie's stable, S. Alton.
DIRIGO is by all more Trotting Cyle than any Horse ever standing in Maine, and we have not been an inferior if both and a splendid in every way. One of them, Little Fred trotted a mile in New York, on the Prospect Park Fair Ground, May 29, [illegible] beating five in five, against all horses that never trotted and won in three straight heats—time 2.41, 2.37, 2.39—making better time than any young horse ever made from Maine. Dirigo is 15.1 hands high, and of great stability. Will, in speeding, if anything happens to him or his harness, he will not be blamed, almost invariably.
He also was purchased in 1868, of Horace Moore, of Moore's Corner, the sum of Seven Thousand Dollars, by Hon. John J. Dirigo was sired by Dirigo Jr., Dam, an imported English Thoroughbred mare Maple. His color is a beautiful dark bloom. He stands 15.3 hds., and very stylish. Dirigo is of special blood power to impress that to a horse of his form, for terms of season are put very low.
Warrant, $25; Single service, $15.
Good pasturage and stabling for Mares from a distance.

Medical Notice.
CHRONIC CATARRH.
There are hundreds in this city who are at this moment suffering from Chronic Catarrh, and in unhappy unconsciousness of the danger of which they are exposed. The symptoms of this disease are usually so mild at first, as to excite little or no attention on the part of the sufferer, while it is allowed to pass on from one stage into another and involving in its destructive march more and more serious results. Reader, if you would avoid the dangers of a seated consumption do not neglect a "Cold or Catarrh in the head." That this disease is as fatal in its tendency and productive of such unhappy consequences, no one will be surprised to learn, if he will but reflect that every breath of air that is inhaled into the system, by those suffering from the disease, must pass over an unhealthy and diseased membrane, and the air so passing over those painful and ulcerated surfaces, must of necessity imbibe the most noxious and deadly properties, and in this manner every breath of air you take into the lungs is converted into a poisonous agent of death. There is no, in the entire catalogue of human ills, the treatment of which has been so much neglected, and perhaps so little understood, as Chronic Catarrh, and hence from the positive ordinary attempts by the profession, there is little to hope. Dr. Sanford has cured every case of this distressing complaint which has come under his care for the past three years, and will provably practice exclusively (in one week's time) to any person afflicted. Call at 174 Court street, Boston.

Secretary of the Treasury.

CABLE NEWS.
Great Excitement in Spain
MADRID, July 21. Much excitement prevails throughout Spain. There has been many arrests here and at Valladolid, Barcelona and Cordova, of parties who belonged to the former insurgents. Several Generals and Colonels of the army are among the number. The Government are doubtless taking great precautions to prevent outbreaks. The Ex-Minister of Justice, however, has been withdrawn. The French Government has warned the Spanish conspirators away from the frontier.
At about light occurred yesterday at Cuidad Real, about 100 miles from here, between the civil authorities and a band of insurrectionists, presumed to be in the interest of Don Carlos. Nonb of the Intendant and several of the former were wounded. The insurrectionists were driven off and the leaders all escaped. A deep plot has been discovered, the having for its object the assassination of Serrano, Prim and Rivero.
London, July 21. The Star to-day compliments General Grant's steady refusal to recognize the Cubans as belligerents. The Star says prevents the Spanish Government from accusing the United States of unfriendly feeling towards them, however much she may be grieved by the filibustering expeditions from American ports.
Paris, July 21. The Corps Legislatif will meet the 5th of October.
St. Petersburg, July 21. Katnezoi, the Russian Minister for Washington, leaves for that city on Saturday.

JOHN H. LYNDE, - - PROPRIETOR.

THURSDAY, JULY 22 1869.

State Election, Monday, Sept. 13.

FOR GOVERNOR,

The Democratic party being based in false principles, we are never surprised at any summerset it may leap. But its position in Massachusetts is sufficiently indecorous to command special attention. The Massachusetts Democracy have always, we believe, stood foremost in the oddity of its notions, and the exuberance of its policy. In the days when Democracy held the national reins, Massachusetts adopted the policy of intensifying that stripe of politics to such an extent that that party was kept "conventionally small" for the benefit of those who desired to fill the offices. The party there has ever differed from the same party elsewhere, in that it has been ready when out of power everywhere to go down upon its marrow bones for the least crumb of comfort. With the national officers at its command, its leaders took every means to disgust its moderate adherents and drive them from the composition for public favor; with no official power they seek to ingratiate themselves with every kin it has been so persistently fighting. Massachusetts Democracy has at last a chance to lay a little egg and, however, they have to nauseate their own consciences, they seize the opportunity. The stringent liquor law has been partially enforced in some quarters. No sooner was there a lull than the Democratic press pounced upon the State Constable and commanded that he should enforce the law impartially and thoroughly, that he should close the bars of the leading hotels, as well as the beer shops in North street, that should invade the great aristocratic resorts as well as the German beer gardens. That is healthy. Not that these papers mean what they would seem to impart, for the bitterly opposed the whole system contemplated by the Legislature; but that for a purpose the Democratic papers favor the enforcement of the laws, is an indication that, naturally or through physic, the party is convalescent, and recognizes the force of Gen. Grant's motto. But a flaw is discovered in the law somehow, and the constab has returned some liquor, and will not enforce the law to its fullest extent till the judicial question is settled. Does this call the Democracy to cease to them moral efforts? Not at all. Constitutional or unconstitutional, they demand that the law enforced at once and continue to be enforced. We scarcely know what to term this position. But it would appear as much horror what they please to term "ramrodism" as ramrodism is beyond ordinary Democracy as regards temperance. A stable, reliable and honest party, is this Democracy!

CUBAN AFFAIRS. A Washington dispatch says the representatives of the Cuban revolutionists there do not express regret at the successful breaking up of the recent filibustering expedition in New York. They say the leaders of the parties captured were irresponsible adventurers, and wholly untrustworthy. It is estimated here that the movements of the Junta in New York are mere blind, to cover up the tracks of more important operations going on in other parts of the country. However this may be, the representative of the revolutionists seems to be in the best of spirits, and no less encouraged at the progress of events. Recently a bark, with 24,000 stand of arms and 170,000 rounds of ammunition for Cuba, sailed from Baltimore. She got off without trouble, professing to be loaded with coal, and reached her destination successfully. It is understood that another vessel is likely to sail soon for the same port similarly freighted.

The Chicago Tribune speaketh thusly of political affairs in Ohio: The nomination of Rosecrans for Governor of Ohio is a regular wet blanket on the Democracy. Poor Sam Cary is mad; Vallandigham is mad; Pendleton is mad; Judge Rainey is mad; and everything is unlovely all around. Old Pap Thomas, being off on the Pacific coast, with no intention of returning, little Toosey will have to take the soundest thrashing he ever got in his life, next October, with nobody to save him from complete annihilation. Toosey always gets whipped on the first day, and the first day is all there is of an election in Ohio.

DELINQUENT INCOME TAX PAYERS. A telegram to the Journal says the Internal Revenue Department is in possession of flattering evidence of the effect of the recent exposé of delinquent income tax payers in New York City. The number of individuals who have suddenly discovered that their income is large enough to be taxed astonishes the assessors, who report that their energies are severely taxed in making out the proper statements for those who have neglected this important business.

It is stated that Asa Packer, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, was nominated solely because he is estimated to be worth $2,000,000. Packer has nothing to recommend him but his bank account. He is old, infirm, and past his usefulness. Governor Geary, the Republican candidate, has served the country as a statesman and a soldier. He is energetic and progressive. The issue in the canvass in Pennsylvania will be dollars ago and imbecility, against brains, patriotism and activity.

SECRETARY BOUTWELL'S PRACTICAL ECONOMY. The determination of Secretary Boutwell to adhere to the economical rule cannot be better understood than in stating that, since he assumed the duties of Secretary of the Treasury, there has not been a single appointment made to his own office, while a number have been discharged. The same rule has been practically carried out in all the bureaus, and the pay rolls of this department at the end of the present month will show a very flattering reduction of expenses compared with the rolls, on his accession to the office.

THE VIRGINIA SITUATION. The Virginia newspapers of Friday and Saturday are significant. The Walker organs are followed by an over-present fear—that of being taken for Democrats. With one accord they cut loose from the annoying associations. Even the bitter old Enquirer and Examiner, for long years (the Enquirer since 1804) the leader and dictator of the Democracy, coined out (Friday the 16th instant) and says:

"The Democratic papers at the North have committed a very grave error in upholding this great robbery to the Virginia Democracy." There has been no such party in this State for eight years, and its very bones have rotted, and now crumble at the touch. No resurrectionary process could bring that party to life, and its ashes are mingled with, and annihilation wished from, that of the old Whig party.

The Whig has a correspondent who says that the Democrats gave up everything in the late election "while mass's party," "State rights," and voted for a Yankee for Governor, and for Hunnicutt for Congress. He solemnly pledged his party to preserve the new constitution with all its security to the negroes, and asks "what else can we be expected to do?" Sure enough, what else could be asked of such polite and courteous gentlemen?

Gen W. S. Hancock, in declining to permit the use of his name as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania, says:

Were I in civil life, no distinction would be more agreeable to me than to be Governor of Pennsylvania. I have however followed the profession of arms from boyhood, and now that I have acquired considerable rank, do not wish to abandon it and enter upon life for which I am much less prepared by experience or education."

It occurs to us that the declination in this case was suggested by the fact that the hard shell Democracy of Pennsylvania had already in effect declined to favor him. But there is another part of this letter which is, in striking, bad taste. He did not wish to abandon military life for civil honors! That is remarkably odd, considering that before the last Tammany Convention Gen. Hancock was actively electioneering for the Presidential nomination, and during the heated contest his friends were working for him like beavers with little distinct understanding that he was ready to accept the situation. It's rather late in the day for Gen. Hancock to declare that he does not wish to [illegible]

No authority has been given for the landing of the cable.

Centennial Celebration.

HANOVER, N. H., July 21.

The Centennial of Dartmouth College was celebrated here today with great spirit and enthusiasm.

The occasion has gathered together, from all parts of the country, and even from beyond the seas, a great multitude of the Alumni, and the day has been spent most delightfully in the public exercises and in the exchange of fraternal greetings and the renewal of old friendships freshened and invigorated by their return to the fondly remembered scenes of youthful struggle and triumph.

IN A BOILER.

A CALIFORNIA LOVE-STORY.

(Concluded.)

I felt the touch of his hot hand upon my face. It seemed as if a thousand needles were entering every part of my body; a red blur obscured my vision and it was becoming darker and darker. I felt as if something was pressing upon my head which now seemed to lessen my body; my breath became shorter and shorter—till at once it stopped. I felt, as I counted the beatings of my heart—one, two, three, four, five, six! All then was oblivion.

* * * * * * *

I opened my eyes, that is I felt that I opened them, as not a ray of light fell upon the pupils. Darkness, impenetrable darkness was around me. Was I in the grave? I made an effort to stretch forth my hands. I succeeded. They moved through water, which I now felt was eddying around my neck.

Where was I? Surely it was not a dream for I felt that I was thoroughly awake. I raised my right arm to my head and my hand came in contact with an iron rod upon which my head was lying. Again the question passed through my mind: "Where am I?"

Soon, but too soon, the question was answered.

Hark! I heard the sound of a distant voice. It came nearer and nearer. Oh, my ears did not deceive me! It was the voice of George, our night watchman.

He was singing a song. The words of the refrain came distinctly to my ears:

"And for Bonnie Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die."

It took all my strength to raise myself into a sitting posture. I stretched out my arms. My hands came in contact with cold iron. I felt that I was sitting upon something that had a cylindrical shape, and the water was now up to my waist.

All at once the horrible truth flashed upon my mind. Great God of Heaven! I was mad! No I no, not mad, but I felt that misery in the shape of a terrible spectre was approaching me—for the question was answered:

"I was imprisoned within the steam-boiler!"

I began to shout:

"Help! George, for God's sake, help!"

But my voice sounded like that of a muffled bell. Then I commenced to pound with my fists upon the iron. Surely, George must hear that, thought I.

But no, he was whistling the tune of Yankee Doodle.

Once he stopped, and a thrill of joy ran through me. Then he began again.

I felt my way to the head of the boiler, for I now heard that he was opening the furnace doors. I knew well what he was going to do. Soon I heard a scratching sound—he was lighting a match. Then I heard the rustling of shavings which he was throwing into the furnace. This was shortly followed by a crackling sound.

"He has lit the fire, and I will be boiled alive," thought I, again pounding and scratching against the sides of the boiler, in the vain hope of making myself heard. I felt not the pain, but I felt that the warm blood was dropping from my lacerated knuckles and finger nails. I listened. The sharp crackling sound of the fire became lower and lower. Again I had hope—the fire had gone out, and I knew that the watchman had gone to bed, for the lighting of the fire was his last duty at five o'clock in the morning. I also knew that the fireman would not rise until half past five. Twenty, perhaps twenty-five minutes, and then he would come and relight the fire.

Thirty minutes and then I must die!

I folded my hands, I prayed to God, as I had never prayed before. I recalled to my mind a prayer my mother taught me when I was a child, and a holy calm came over me, for surely, thought I, He who sees the sparrows fall, will not desert me in my present need.

Slowly my hands parted and fell to my side, and slowly I crawled back to the end of the boiler, where I knew was the manhole through which I had been shoved by the wicked engineer while I was under the influence of the drug which he had administered. I passed my hand over the cast-iron plate which shut up the only progress to the boiler. I pushed against it with all my strength; still I knew that one hundred pounds of steam pressure could not remove that plate. I exhausted by my efforts, and I threw myself full length upon the flues. The water covered me up to my neck and head, which I kept above its level.

A desperate thought came to my mind. Why should I not drown myself by lowering my head? It would end my misery at once. Some one seemed to whisper into my ear, "Do it." Then another voice said, "It is suicide, and God will punish you!"

I laughed, yes I laughed; "it's only a dream," said I, "and I soon will awake and once more see the blessed light of day."

But it was not a dream, it was a terrible reality. The love of life came back to me. Again I pressed my hands over the cold surface of the boiler. They came in contact with something which moved! God in his infinite mercy, had given to me the means of escape from that living tomb. My hand was grasping the short iron bar which the boys had dropped into the boiler. It was lying across some of the stay rods which traversed the boiler in all directions.

I used it as a hammer against the cast iron plate which covered the manhole. One sharp blow, a crack, and a stream of blinding light fell upon my eyes. It was the rising sun, for the back part of the boiler looked towards the east. Two more blows, and the broken plate fell with a splash into the water, and left the aperture open and clear for my escape.

It is not a wonder to me that the intensity of joy that I experienced did not kill me. With difficulty I crawled through the opening. I staggered toward the engineer's room and opened the door. The apartment was tenantless. James had gone to his breakfast. I looked at the clock; it still lacked fifteen minutes to six.

A strange thought flashed across my mind. What if I should take a spare man hold from the store-room close by, and fix it into the aperture? I had yet ten minutes time. Would not James think I was still in the boiler?

I ran to the storeroom and took the plate from the shelf. It seemed very heavy to me as I carried it to the back part of the boiler. There I laid it down and closely examined the lead gasket which was around its rim. Everything was complete with the exception of putting on some red lead. I went back to the storeroom, got the little cask of lead and put some of it upon the tow that James had wound round the lead gasket. Then I fastened the plate to the aperture by means of a clamp and nut. While I was at work I heard the voice of the fireman. He was swearing at the neglect of the watchman in not lighting the fire. There was no danger of my being detected. He, as he afterwards told me, thought that it was James's smoking some repairs for he heard the clanking of irons while he was employed about the furnace.

It was near six, and in a minute more James would return from the boarding-house that stood some distance apart from the saw-mill. I looked about me. Near the boiler and close to the steam gauge was a high shelf half concealed by a large beam. By jumping upon the boiler I could reach that shelf. I was not a minute too late. Scarcely was I concealed behind the beam before I saw James enter the engine room. He looked very pale, and large black circles were around his eyes as if he had passed a sleepless night.

There was no partition between the boiler and the engine room. One glance at the steam gauge told him that the watchman had neglected his duty. He rushed down the few steps in front of the furnace and shouted to the fireman:

"Quick Jim, throw more pitch pine logs into the fire. Mr. Smith will give us fits if he look I he is coming now to find why I haven't blown the whistle!"

"Watchman's fault?" grumbled Mr. Smith, opening the doors and shoveling in the furnace a huge pile of shavings. Then Smith entered the fire-room and James explained to him why the steam was not up high enough to start the engine.

"George ought to have fired up that devil, I suppose he was sleeping at his post," concluded he.

"Well, said the father of Minnie, I will tell Louis to pay him his wages and discharge him."

When James heard my name mentioned, I could see that he trembled from head to foot.

"By the way, where is Louis? He has not been to breakfast and he did not sleep in his room last night," said Mr. Smith.

"I don't know," faltered the guilty wretch, turning away his face.

He said to the second sawyer that he was going to S—— upon some business, said Jim, looking up.

All right. Now, Mr. Alton, do your best to get steam up as soon as possible, for every hour lost is money out of the company's treasury," said Mr. Smith, leaving the fire-room.

I sat there and worry, yet I remained a

* A week [illegible] was clear [illegible] a resident [illegible] Alantic to [illegible] with my fists upon the iron. Surely, George must hear that, thought I.

But no, he was whistling the tune of Yankee Doodle.

Once he stopped, and a thrill of joy ran through me. Then he began again.

I felt my way to the head of the boiler, for I now heard that he was opening the furnace doors. I knew well what he was going to do. Soon I heard a scratching sound—he was lighting a match. Then I heard the rustling of shavings which he was throwing into the furnace. This was shortly followed by a crackling sound.

"He has lit the fire, and I will be boiled alive," thought I, again pounding and scratching against the sides of the boiler, in the vain hope of making myself heard. I felt not the pain, but I felt that the warm blood was dropping from my lacerated knuckles and finger nails. I listened. The sharp crackling sound of the fire became lower and lower. Again I had hope—the fire had gone out, and I knew that the watchman had gone to bed, for the lighting of the fire was his last duty at five o'clock in the morning. I also knew that the fireman would not rise until half past five. Twenty, perhaps twenty-five minutes, and then he would come and relight the fire.

Thirty minutes and then I must die!

I folded my hands, I prayed to God, as I had never prayed before. I recalled to my mind a prayer my mother taught me when I was a child, and a holy calm came over me, for surely, thought I, He who sees the sparrows fall, will not desert me in my present need.

Slowly my hands parted and fell to my side, and slowly I crawled back to the end of the boiler, where I knew was the manhole through which I had been shoved by the wicked engineer while I was under the influence of the drug which he had administered. I passed my hand over the cast-iron plate which shut up the only progress to the boiler. I pushed against it with all my strength; still I knew that one hundred pounds of steam pressure could not remove that plate. I exhausted by my efforts, and I threw myself full length upon the flues. The water covered me up to my neck and head, which I kept above its level.

A desperate thought came to my mind. Why should I not drown myself by lowering my head? It would end my misery at once. Some one seemed to whisper into my ear, "Do it." Then another voice said, "It is suicide, and God will punish you!"

I laughed, yes I laughed; "it's only a dream," said I, "and I soon will awake and once more see the blessed light of day."

But it was not a dream, it was a terrible reality. The love of life came back to me. Again I pressed my hands over the cold surface of the boiler. They came in contact with something which moved! God in his infinite mercy, had given to me the means of escape from that living tomb. My hand was grasping the short iron bar which the boys had dropped into the boiler. It was lying across some of the stay rods which traversed the boiler in all directions.

I used it as a hammer against the cast iron plate which covered the manhole. One sharp blow, a crack, and a stream of blinding light fell upon my eyes. It was the rising sun, for the back part of the boiler looked towards the east. Two more blows, and the broken plate fell with a splash into the water, and left the aperture open and clear for my escape.

It is not a wonder to me that the intensity of joy that I experienced did not kill me. With difficulty I crawled through the opening. I staggered toward the engineer's room and opened the door. The apartment was tenantless. James had gone to his breakfast. I looked at the clock; it still lacked fifteen minutes to six.

A strange thought flashed across my mind. What if I should take a spare man hold from the store-room close by, and fix it into the aperture? I had yet ten minutes time. Would not James think I was still in the boiler?

I ran to the storeroom and took the plate from the shelf. It seemed very heavy to me as I carried it to the back part of the boiler. There I laid it down and closely examined the lead gasket which was around its rim. Everything was complete with the exception of putting on some red lead. I went back to the storeroom, got the little cask of lead and put some of it upon the tow that James had wound round the lead gasket. Then I fastened the plate to the aperture by means of a clamp and nut. While I was at work I heard the voice of the fireman. He was swearing at the neglect of the watchman in not lighting the fire. There was no danger of my being detected. He, as he afterwards told me, thought that it was James's smoking some repairs for he heard the clanking of irons while he was employed about the furnace.

It was near six, and in a minute more James would return from the boarding-house that stood some distance apart from the saw-mill. I looked about me. Near the boiler and close to the steam gauge was a high shelf half concealed by a large beam. By jumping upon the boiler I could reach that shelf. I was not a minute too late.
